

K.U.LEUVEN AWARDS DOCTORATE HONORIS CAUSA TO JOHN BRAITHWAITE

The Academic Council of the K.U.Leuven has decided to award a doctorate honoris causa to Professor John Braithwaite, Research Council Federation Fellow at the Australian National University in Canberra and founder of the Regulatory Institutions Network at the Research School of Social Sciences, Australian National University.

Braithwaite is commonly regarded as one of the most influential criminologists of our time, particularly because of his crucial role in the development of theories on restorative justice and on regulation. Moreover, his theoretical power and vision have had a remarkable impact in many fields of the social sciences beyond criminology. The K.U.Leuven is honouring Braithwaite for his important scientific contribution to criminology, peace building and sustainable development, as well as for his leadership to commit the social sciences to an ethical approach towards social justice, participative democracy, human rights and world peace.

The honorary doctorate will be awarded at an official ceremony on Monday 4 February 2008. The following days several activities are organised in honour of and in the presence of John Braithwaite.

INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM ON “CRIMINOLOGY AND SOCIAL JUSTICE”
In honour of John Braithwaite

organised by the Leuven Institute of Criminology (LINC)

Thursday 7 February 2008, Faculty of Law, K.U.Leuven

— Background

At the occasion of the Honorary Doctorate awarded by the K.U.Leuven to John Braithwaite the Leuven Institute of Criminology (LINC) organises an international symposium on “Criminology and Social Justice”.

The work of John Braithwaite is witness to an intensive commitment to social justice issues. Throughout his career, his scientific engagement and expertise were imbued with a firm ethical view on mankind and society, oriented towards social justice, participative democracy, security and peace. All of these issues are of paramount importance in a world without borders but characterized by many conflicts of different natures. Braithwaite is currently one of the most vocal leaders in committing social sciences to the broader movement for sustainable social development.

The Leuven Institute of Criminology likes to seize the opportunity of this honorary doctorate to reflect on the social role of academic criminology. Whilst devoted to high-quality scientific research, criminologists at LINC and elsewhere are also acutely aware of the socio-ethical dimensions of their work and regard them as crucial in an era in which the grand ambitions (and sometimes illusions) of efficient clinical treatments and public repression of crime seem to overshadow, and even dominate, further concerns for social justice and ethics.

This international symposium is addressed to researchers, policy-makers, the media and students working in the field of criminology, restorative justice and social regulation, in Belgium and other European countries. It is intended to engage all participants in a reflection on issues such as the relation (even the tension) between ‘embedded criminology’ and criminology as an autonomous critical social science, and the (lack of) interaction between empirical fact finding and socio-ethical concerns.
